INTRODUCTION

1. The Committee of Victims of Guarimba1 and Continued Coup d’État presents to the Human Rights Committee additional information to the report submitted by the Government of the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

2. The Committee is a non-governmental organization formed by the direct and indirect victims of all incidents of political violence occurred in the country during 2013 and 2014, in order to make known our stories and our relatives who lost their lives or suffered some injury or violation of their human rights and demand justice for the crimes committed during these acts.

3. We in the Committee have suffered serious violations of our human rights; we have lost our loved ones, sons, daughters, fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters, husbands and wives and directly experienced the violence unleashed by political ambitions of those who want to change in a violent way a democratically elected government.

4. We are committed to demand an investigation and the determination of the truth of the events that occurred, the perpetrators and masterminds, what were their real motives, and, above all, to issue the appropriate sanctions.

EVENTS OF POLITICAL VIOLENCE OCCURRED IN 2013 AND 2014

5. From the day that Nicolás Maduro was democratically elected as President of the Republic, on April 14, 2013, our country has been victim of violent actions that violate human rights of millions of Venezuelans.

6. Since that day, it have sparked political violent actions directed by sectors of society that are opposed to the Government, which are intended to ignore the majority will of the Venezuelan people expressed in free elections and to force a de facto rupture of constitutional order. These actions have been articulated and accompanied by individuals and political parties opposed to the President Nicolás Maduro, as well as foreign governments, and even by terrorist organizations and organized crime.

1It is known as Guarimba the positioning of barricades with all sorts of waste material in order to hinder the movement of vehicles and people.
7. The same April 14, 2013, the opposition candidate who lost the election, Mr. Henrique Capriles Radonski called on supporters to download their “arrechera”\textsuperscript{2} on the streets against the election results that were adverse.

8. This public call to generate violence for political purposes was conducted through the media (radio, television and others) and generated attacks of his supporters against those who celebrated the electoral victory of President Maduro and against public facilities aimed at guaranteeing human rights as health and nutrition.

9. These violent actions called by the losing candidate brought as a direct consequence the death of eleven (11) people and dozens injured, most of whom were in the streets to express their joy at their victory. It is important to note that violent actions included the use of firearms and that many were premeditated. All the deceased, including children, were the result of direct action by activists and supporters of parties that oppose the government of President Nicolás Maduro Moros.

10. Almost a year later, on January 23, 2014, Mr. Leopoldo López addressed the media at a public aggressive campaign against the President of the Republic and the institutions of the State, noting that it was necessary to go out and “conquer democracy” by implementing a plan called “La Salida” (The Exit), whose aim was to promote the overthrow of the President of the Republic. In this context and on a daily basis, he issued messages on his twitter account with the same objective.

11. In Venezuela, January 23 is a representative date, given that in 1958 that day was over threw the dictator Marcos Pérez Jiménez. In this context, Mr. Leopoldo López overwhelmingly said “we have to go out and conquer the democracy”, with no other purpose that simply plant the idea in his followers that the only trough street actions a change could be done, inviting to be participants in order to deny the legitimacy of the national government.

12. On February 12, 2014, began the actions of political violence aimed at coercively oust President Nicolás Maduro under the call on “The Exit”. This time, the activities were led by the most radical sectors of Venezuela’s political opposition, supported by opposition Mayors of the municipality of San Cristobal in Táchira state (Daniel Ceballos) and the municipality of San Diego in Carabobo state (Enzo Scarano).

\textsuperscript{2} In our country the Word “arrechera” means anger, rage, and fury.
13. The political violence began during a demonstration convened on February 12, 2014, by opposition leaders Leopoldo López, Maria Corina Machado and Antonio Ledezma. There, they made public calls for violence and the disregard of the legitimately constituted government. These calls were messages of hate and violence aimed at Venezuelans in order to create a situation of tension and aggression. This was clearly reflected when, at the end of the demonstration, and after the withdrawal of most of the participants, a group of them decided to attack the headquarters of the Public Ministry and fire patrols of one of the organs of State security, the Body of Scientific, Penal and Criminal Investigations (CICPC) and several private vehicles. They also attacked the headquarters of the Ministry of People’s Power for Housing and the facilities of Hotel Alba Caracas, Parque Carabobo Square and its playground. The public servants who tried to calm them were victims of verbal and physical injuries.

14. The political leaders of the opposition who organized that demonstration had to call for calm their demonstrators and thus contain the violence that arose that day, something that never happened. Rather, their expressions publicly incited to hatred and political violence.

15. In this context, in February 2014, a retired army general named Ángel Vivas, called to insurrection to opposition demonstrators, sending messages that instructed people about placing tramps with warfare techniques in the streets of our country. The retired General appeared publicly from his home carrying firearms of war. He also issued videos by social networks threatening the national government.

16. Since February 12, 2014, until June 2014, a series of peaceful demonstrations took place in several cities, organized by a sector of the opposition to the national government. In parallel, actions of political violence against persons were generated, all organized, directed and implemented by the leaders, parties and movements of other sector of the opposition to the government.

17. The direct results of the violent actions were the death of 43 people (including 8 by action of law enforcement officers and 35 resulted from actions of people in the opposition who participated in acts of political violence), 878 citizens injured and thousands of people affected in their human rights to health, education, food, free movement, among other rights. Of the 43 victims killed, 9 were law enforcement officers, who were killed by shots fired by firearms, which is unprecedented in Venezuela’s contemporary history and shows the levels and degrees of violence by opposition sectors who took part in those events.
18. Acts of violence for political ends additionally included arson, entrapment against people on the streets and roads using military skills, obstruction of roads, attacks on public and private institutions, education centers, universities, health centers, subsidized food distribution networks, public infrastructure, private markets, public transportation units, among others. Even worse, people who participated in these events set fire to an early education center with 89 children of 0-3 years inside the building.

19. Of the 43 people who died during 2014, 35 of them were killed in states or municipalities where opposition parties govern (Miranda and Lara states, Valencia and San Diego municipalities of Carabobo state, Maracaibo municipality in Zulia state and San Cristobal municipality in Táchira state, Libertador municipality in Mérida state) whose authorities, by their negligence or omission did not stop the violence, but rather, in many cases supported them.³

20. The acts of political violence occurred mainly in middle and upper class housing, and in municipalities and states governed by the opposition, whose authorities were directly involved in the events of violence or, at best, maintained a tolerant, passive attitude, if not encouraging such violence.

21. The acts of violence affected the human rights of thousands of people for weeks that were confined inside their homes. They could not get out to shop (right to food), to take their children to school (right to education), to be addressed in a health center (right to health) or to go to work (right to free movement and right to work).

THE RIGHT TO PEACEFUL ASSEMBLY AND DEMONSTRATION (ARTICLE 21 OF THE COVENANT ON CIVIL AND POLITICAL RIGHTS)

22. In the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela the right to demonstrate peacefully and without weapons is enshrined in Article 68 of the Constitution that states "Citizens have the right to demonstrate, peacefully and without weapons, without other requirements that those established by law. The use of firearms and toxic substances to control peaceful demonstrations is prohibited. The law shall regulate the activity of police and security corps in maintaining public order".

³Recollection resulting from data published by the Public Ministry.
23. Venezuela has signed and ratified the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, whose Article 21 establishes the recognition of the right to peaceful assembly, adding that the exercise of this right may only be subject to the restrictions prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society in the interests of national security, public safety or public order, or to protect public health or morals or the rights and freedoms of others.

24. It is clear that the right to demonstrate is recognized nationally and internationally and regulatory texts refer explicitly only to "peaceful demonstrations". Violent demonstrations organized, directed and developed by leaders, political parties and movements opposed to the Government in April 2013 and February to June 2014, they are not protected by the Constitution or laws or international treaties of human rights.

25. In the case of our country, under the law governing the matter, are considered violent demonstrations those who try to impede the normal functioning of the State institutions, that promote disorders or seek to hinder the free movement, being able to establish penalties for these cases. The law, in line with comparative law, imposes the obligation to notify the realization of a public meeting or demonstration twenty-four (24) hours in advance, which means that non-compliance of this requirement, becomes an illegal demonstration.

26. The right to peaceful assembly and demonstration is not an absolute right, it has some limits in defense of human rights and other third parties, such as the protection of health or morals, national security and the public order.

27. In the case of Venezuela, the protests in April 2013 and February to June 2014, do not qualify under national and international legislation as peaceful, as its consequences were 43 people killed (35 of them by action of those who participated directly in acts of political violence, including 9 public safety officers killed by gunfire), 878 injured (most of them outside the political conflict and approximately 21% of them are officials and security officers) and thousands of citizens suffered the violation of their human rights to health, education, food and free transit, being confined to their homes because of the difficulties to transit and perform their daily tasks. Proofs of this are also the significant damage caused to equipment, street furniture and public transportation, besides attacks on offices of government agencies that caused the protesters in those days.⁴

⁴ Public Ministry information.
28. Neither they could be described as peaceful and non-violent meetings and demonstrations organized by the leaders, political parties and movements opposed to the Government, given the lethality of the objects used to block the streets and roads, which included placement traps to cause damage to people, using military techniques on many occasions, such as the "Guayas" (steel wires) placed at the end of the track at a certain height to generate injury to persons riding motorcycles, oil spilled to impede rapid circulation, including highways, often around sewers and drains which lids were removed and the destruction and burning of trees. There are even testimonies, photographic and audiovisual evidence to report the use of firearms, including long-range rifles and automatic pistols, by persons involved in these acts of political violence against the population outside the conflict.

29. The sophistication of techniques and objects used and placed on the public road in order to violate human rights and force a de facto rupture of constitutional order, cannot be part of the right to peaceful assembly and demonstration and, generally, they are not used by those citizens who want to express their ideas and discontent in any democratic country, but rather part of strategies and tactics used in war.

30. Therefore, under any aspects or rules governing the matter can be considered these demonstrations as a result of the legitimate exercise of the human right to peaceful assembly and demonstration enshrined in the Constitution and in international treaties on the subject. On the contrary, they constitute acts of violence for political ends that became in damages to human rights, mostly the result of direct action of the people involved in planned actions, directed and developed by opposition leaders, political parties and movements to the national government.

THE RIGHT TO LIFE AND PERSONAL INTEGRITY (ARTICLE 6 OF THE COVENANT ON CIVIL AND POLITICAL RIGHTS)

31. Article 43 of the Constitution of the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela states that "The right to life is inviolable. No law shall establish the death penalty, no authority shall apply..." Similarly, Article 46 provides that "Everyone has the right to have his physical, mental and moral integrity respected..." In the same sense the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, Article 6, provides that "The right to life is inherent in the human person. This right shall be protected by law. No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of life..."
32. In Venezuela, following the political plan called "The Exit", planned, directed and executed by the most radical sectors of the opposition from February 2014, 43 people were killed and 878 were injured, that violating the right to life and personal integrity and causing giant suffering to those families, the destruction of many homes since, in most cases, the deceased were the support of those families. Annexed to this report there is a brief description of each of the deceased and the circumstances of their death.

33. Of the total of people killed, twenty-nine (29) of them died of wounds from firearms, including nine (9) officers of the State security bodies. This shows clearly and unequivocally that the demonstrations were not peaceful, but on the contrary, had a high degree of violence.

34. Most of these people killed were a direct result of the actions undertaken by violent opposition demonstrators trying to produce continued violence which would lead to the overthrow of constitutional order and of President Nicolas Maduro, and produced violation of the right to life and physical integrity of Venezuelans.

35. As a result from these acts of violence, prosecutors accused Mr. Daniel Ceballos for the crime of rebellion and conspiracy; Mr. Leopoldo López on charges of damage and fire as instigator, author of public intimidation and association, all under the current legal system, and against Mr. Enzo Scarano who was convicted for misdirection of the command of the injunctive relief provided for in Article 31 of the Organic Law on Protection of Rights and Constitutional Guarantees.

THE RIGHT OF ACCESS TO JUSTICE (ARTICLE 14 OF THE COVENANT ON CIVIL AND POLITICAL RIGHTS)

36. As of February 12, 2014, the bodies of justice in Venezuela began the procedures to ensure that the acts of violence occurred do not go unpunished and that and the authors of them are sanctioned. Thus, according to public information issued by the Public Ministry, 3,351 people were apprehended before the Courts of Control, of which 1,507 people were issued injunction presentation; 41 were detained, 59 persons were issued a conditional suspension of the process, 1,103 people were given full freedom, and 731 people other precautionary measures.5

37. As of January 31, 2015, the Public Ministry, in the field of Common Crimes, has presented 2,844 conclusive acts involving the same number of people. Of these, 1,402 were accusations, 6 Fiscal File, and 1,436 dismissals.

5 Report issued by the Public Ministry.
38. With regard to investigations against officers of the State security bodies, until January 31, 2015, were presented 215 Concluding Acts, of which 13 were accusations, 184 Dismissals and 19 Fiscal File. 22 investigations remain open.

39. Likewise, officials of the State security bodies were accused for alleged criminal offenses according to the following: two (02) Chacao municipality Police officers for Homicide; three (03) Aragua state Police officers, six (06) officers of the Bolivarian National Police, three (03) Anzoátegui state Bolivarian National Police officers, five (05) Mérida state Police officers, three (03) Monagas state Police officers and one (01) Falcon state Police officer for Cruel Treatment, and seven (07) Bolivarian National Guard officers for Homicide.⁶

40. On that basis, this Committee considers that proceedings before the organs of justice in Venezuela must take its course, as it is happening, and the perpetrators be duty punished.

THE RIGHT TO THE INTERNATIONAL PROTECTION OF HUMAN RIGHTS

41. Article 31 of the Constitution of the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela provides that "Everyone has the right, under the terms established by the treaties, pacts and conventions on human rights ratified by the Republic, to address petitions or complaints to international bodies created for that purpose, in order to request protection of their human rights. The State shall, in accordance with procedures established in this Constitution and the law, the measures necessary to comply with the decisions of the international bodies referred to in this article".

42. This Committee would like to make some considerations regarding this right. First, though any person or group of people has the right to direct requests or raise issues with international organizations for the protection of human rights, these requests should meet the requirements established in the international doctrine in cases of complaints or cases before international bodies, to prevent the collapse of the protection system.

43. One of those requirements is the exhaustion of domestic remedies in the country, because if people or group of people not at least try to bring complaints under domestic law and expect its course, or demonstrate that these allegations have not been prospered or have been subject to undue delay, the international system would be fully inefficient and contrary to the objectives for which it was created. In the case of the events in our country in April 2013 and February to June of 2014, we believe that the Venezuelan justice system has been operating properly, there was no procedural delay or undue delay, except those produced by the same defendants when they freely and without justification, decided not to attend trial hearings.

44. The international human rights protection system should not rule favoring impunity for crimes, asking them to release those responsible for the violence, especially when the State has granted them broadly their rights to due process, access to justice and effective remedies to all defendants in criminal proceedings. In this case, what has actually happened is that decisions of the organs of justice have been contrary to the interests and claims of the accused. But this does not constitute a violation of human rights or a denial of the right.

45. These international institutions and mechanisms for the protection of human rights should not issue rulings that favor impunity for perpetrators of crimes which led to the death of 43 Venezuelans and left 878 people injured, since that would proceed against protection of human rights of the true victims, those who lost part of our families. Therefore, we are determined to fight for that justice and punishment for those responsible for the violence and crimes.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE COMMITTEE OF VICTIMS OF GUARIMBAS AND CONTINUED COUP D’ÉTAT

46. The Committee of Victims of the Guarimba and Continued Coup d’État considers relevant to issue some recommendations and actions that should be performed both in national and international institutions to ensure the right to truth and justice and to punish the real perpetrators of the acts of violence that took the lives and injured our families.

47. In the case of the events in our country we ask that human rights are not exploited. The right to peaceful protest, the right to assembly and freedom of expression cannot become an excuse to justify and legitimize acts that constitute true acts of violence and crimes. The international community should not be confused about the true intentions chased by leaders, political parties and movements opposed to the Government when they organized the violent demonstrations of April 2013 and February to June 2014, and that the only purpose that moved them was the overthrow of democratically elected Governors through de facto and unconstitutional means.

48. We request that there be no impunity and accelerate research. For this it is essential that all violations of human rights that occurred during the Guarimbas are investigated and those responsible effectively punished. That criminal and disciplinary investigation developed with the utmost diligence, speed and efficiency possible, that the material and intellectual authors of the violations and those who encouraged and politically directed these actions are punished.

49. We request that the actions taken against all persons investigated or punished for their intellectual or material responsibility of the serious events that caused serious violations of the right to life and personal integrity of our families stand firm.

50. We request that all actions and measures to fully repair victims of human rights violations be promoted, including health care and social security, especially for those individuals and families who have been in distress at the loss of their loved ones or in condition of temporary or permanent disability due to injuries to their physical integrity.

51. We request that the violence occurred in April 2013 and February to June 2014, will not be silenced or distorted, as some media and political actors did and even some international human rights organizations, trying to show the authors and masterminds of these crimes as victims of events, forgetting or ignoring the stories of the families of the dead and injured of those days.

52. Therefore, we urge the international community and the international system of protection of human rights that the actions carrying forward are directed to request that there be no impunity and to punish the perpetrators of crimes committed against our families and, above all, there is respect and solidarity with all Victims of the Guarimba and Continued Coup d’État who have lost our loved ones by the action of those who use human rights as an instrument to commit acts of political violence.
