- 2) The dimension of female victims is a high one in the total of victims identified annually, and the dimension of under aged victims out of the total number of female victims has an equal value to the adult one.

<sup>2</sup> Data regarding victims that were identified in the first semester of 2016 have not been included in the multiannual perspective regarding identified victims, women victims identified and under aged female victims.

3) The annual quantitative trend has the same route on all monitored dimensions (total of victims identified, under age victims) all of them presenting a general trend to reduce the quantitative dimension form year to year, in an accentuated rhythm starting 2009

4) Even if the quantitative dimension of under aged victims has a descending route, their share in the total number of victims is a high one, this aspect having two possible explanations: a) there is an increased criminal interest for using and exploiting under aged girls through traffic, especially in the internal one and b) the efforts to track down the trafficking of under aged persons crimes are more intensified and, thus, more and more under aged victims are saved by the authorities (police, prosecutors' offices).

A. Residence

urban	493	278	210	307	313	310	255	245	276	133

Observations

It is more than obvious that females from the rural areas have a higher share among victims of trafficking in human beings identified annually. Among the factors that contribute to a higher vulnerability to trafficking for the persons that reside in the rural areas we can identify as part of the reason belonging to conditions that lead to a very low quality of life: a lack of job opportunities, a lower education level compared to the urban areas, limited access to information, lack of quality infrastructure, under average income, etc.

Observation

By far the most female victims are sexually exploited by forcing them to become prostitutes on the street, in clubs or hotels or forcing them to pornography. In case of labour exploitation, female victims are trafficked in agriculture, textile factories and other produce making. Domestic exploitation (forcing one to work in private houses) although little documented, is also a form of exploitation among women victims.

Observation

The accession of Romania beginning 2007 has led to a migration wave to work abroad, this phenomenon changing to risk factors and victimisation especially for adult persons, women and men, who became exploited in constructions or agriculture. Such trends manifested itself through a bigger share of external trafficked victims including the female ones. Factors such as the request for cheap labour and sexual services, more present by the moment in the Romanian space, together with a increased attention of the police officers in identifying cases of trafficking in human beings and under aged persons has led to an increase of the number of victims identified beginning with 2012. The share of under aged girls among victims internally trafficked is a very high one, these persons being especially sexually exploited (prostitution and pornography).
