Misuse of the Japanese National Budget makes miserable children. Japanese Government must ensure immediate implementation of the CCPR Article 23-1 & 4

Nowadays, kidnapping of biological children is rampant in Japan, and the number of unfortunate children who suffer poverty, develop “single-parent alienation syndrome” or are killed by their stepfathers or stepmothers after their parents' divorce.

Support groups for women and feminist groups play a role in this divorce, and they receive state funding under the guise of 'supporting women'.

If that budget were spent on women and children who really need it, these problems would not arise.

However, the state budget used for this has created a huge interest structure, and organizations that are supposed to protect children and women are complicit in increasing the number of victims. This is considered a complete conflict of interest.

Using government funds as a source of support, women's support groups and feminist groups incite couples to divorce on one side or the other and abet false Domestic Violence (here after DV) and child abduction. They force couples to divorce, destroying families and making children unhappy.

In short, the Japanese Government's mismanagement of the budget results in children's unhappiness.

We therefore request the CCPR to issue recommendations to the Japanese Government to immediately stop the wrong use of the budget, use the budget in the right way to eliminate the unhappy child created by the state budget.

We understand that the budget of the Japanese government is to be used for the well-being and peace of the Japanese people. However, the government's budget is being used without detailed screening by women's support NPOs, radical feminist groups, and groups with specific political agendas, whose actual status is unclear.

As a result, families that were never meant to be broken up are being destroyed, and the number of children who are not able to receive the selfless love they should be receiving from their parents continues to increase in Japan.

• Representatives: Kenji UTSUNOMIYA, Chieko AKAISHI, Makoto YUASA

• Purpose, etc. (from the corporate registry): The first network in Japan to address a wide range of poverty issues. Established in October 2007 with the aim of socially and politically resolving poverty issues through the gathering of various civic groups, labor unions, lawyers, and scholars who work on poverty issues. The name of the Metropolitan Migrant Workers' Union is on the flyer for the Anti-Poverty Festa 2008. (An organization that submitted a statement to the ILO regarding forced labor even at the Sado Gold Mine, which the Japanese government recommended to UNESCO as a World Heritage site.)

• Main activities: Supporting homeless people and making them receive public assistance. Makoto Yuasa, who runs the shelter, is the general secretary of the Metropolitan Youth Union.

• Actual situation of listed organizations

When we physically visited to Maison d'Or located in 1-35-28 Hongo, Bunkyo-ku, Tokyo, there was no nameplate on the ground floor nor on the building itself. We went up to the officially registered room on the 3rd floor, there was a nameplate showing "Office Purple." Also, there are more nameplate reads:

• NPO Feminist Counseling Tokyo

• National Network for Supporting Sexual Minorities to Create an Inclusive Society

- Project Purple
- Mame-Neko Office.

There is no nameplate on the address of the “NPO National Women's Shelter Net” which is registered and listed on the Cabinet Office website, it is doubtful whether it actually exists or not.

The fact that the address of the organization that instructs administrative counselors on the procedures and arrangements for women's counseling and the address of the organization that accepts women (such as shelters) has been the same for 10 years is a loophole in the administrative system. It is an act of conflict of interest that can be used to create victims of DV and operate a DV shelter that protects the victims. This shows the fact that women's support business is becoming a concession.

For example, in another words, it is problematic for the government to provide subsidies to an organization that is suspected of having an arsonist setting fires and extinguishing the fires themselves.

Organization #1, Japan Christian Women's Kyofukai, has long been an organization devoted to political strife rather than women's human rights activities, such as the issue of Post-war compensation, including Comfort women issue, the Yasukuni Shrine issue, and to oppose to the Japan's imperial system.

Organization #5, "Walk with Kaori Sato" (Mame-Neko Office), has an article on their website protesting the arrest and detention of Okinawan extreme-left violent activist by the name of Hiroji YAMASHIRO who has committed serial crimes such as attacking the U.S. military base by cutting barbed wires, violence against government officials of Okinawa Defense Bureau and arrested several times. It is suspected that it is an anti-social force.

Organization #7, Kenji UTSUNOMIYA, president of Anti-Poverty Network, is a former president of the Japan Federation of Bar Associations, but is also known as a leading far-left activist in Japan.

It is common knowledge in Japan that the Japanese leftwing has a high affinity with communism and Juche ideology. Another representative, Ms. Chieko AKAISHI who is a President of "NPO Single mother's forum" is currently at the core of the Family Legislation Council in Japan. According to a report, the deliberative council includes content that will allow one parent to designate a custodial parent without going through a divorce. By changing the law becomes possible to legally by a parent to monopolize and possess a child without even kidnapping the child. She is in a part of the government legislature system to change or enact a new law as a private citizen.

However, as she run her own NPO named "Single Mother's Forum," claiming the support for single mother, this means increase the number of single mothers benefit her and her organization.

This is again conflict of interests but Japanese government is not aware of the fact or ignoring the fact, keep using this person within the legislature of family law.

This makes it much easier to get divorced, and increases the number of children who cannot receive the love of their parents, children who suffer from poverty and mental illness, and desperate children who are abused by stepfathers and stepmothers.

By the way, there are many organizations in Japan that provide support for the homeless and the needy, such as Organization#6 “Independent Living Support Center Moyai.” However, as an example in Japan, there is a rampant evil deed called "KAKOIYA" that targets the homeless and the poor.

This KAKOIYA is a corrupt business that forces homeless and other needy people to apply for public assistance social security in exchange for providing them with housing and food, and then takes most of the public assistance social security payments that are provided by Japanese government. It is called “the poverty businesses.”

For example, the organization lures needy persons with the sweet words, "If you enter here, you will receive welfare payments," and places them in an accommodation center, where staff members accompany the needy persons to complete the welfare procedures. However, because the organization has taken away the bankbook and ATM card in the name of the needy person, the needy person cannot receive the full amount of the welfare payments. The needy person's bank account is automatically transferred to the organization under the name of rent, food, operating expenses, and other utility expenses. Therefore, the welfare payment of about 130,000 yen (US$910 as of September 12 exchange rate) per month is not directly transferred to the needy person, and after various nominal "expenses" are deducted, only US$140 to $210 remains in their hands.

As described above, the reality is that most women's support NPOs and feminist organizations in Japan are dens of leftists, communists, and anarchists.

There is nothing wrong with these organizations of the same address if they are working for the well-being of Japan and its people, but they are using public funds to carry out activities that do not benefit Japan or its people. They are creating many unfortunate children.

Women's support NPOs, women's shelters, women's support advocates, feminists, and divorce lawyers steeped in communist ideology contact one side of a couple, especially women, and send them to feminist counseling workshops to brainwash them into believing that they are victims of domestic violence and that marriage is slavery for women. They then instigate false DV petitions and kidnapping of the biological children to ensure custody of the children after the divorce.

As a contingency fee, the divorce attorney deducts 10% to a maximum of 30% of the child support for a maximum of 18 years.

Currently, there is a debate in Japan that child support is insufficient or inadequate. If divorce lawyers deduct the amount every month, it is natural that it is insufficient, and it is no wonder that there are separated parents who are reluctant to pay child support who do not feel comfortable with the deductions.

Communists and anarchists using women's aid as a cover for such activities using the Japanese government's budget to benefit from the following;

- By providing guidance to administrative counter counselors, women's consultations in the government can be carried out according to their own expectations (in order to create interests, any case can be made into DV), and the guidance fee income
- Income from administrative advisory fees
- Income from lecturers such as administrative study groups
- Income from women's shelters in each region
- Income from divorce lawyers' attorney fees (10-30%, withholding possible for up to 18 years)

Sudden parental divorce and child support payments are directly linked to child poverty. Divorce lawyers instigate minor marital discord and marital conflicts and turn them into big problems, so after the divorce, the cohabiting parents speak ill of the separated parents to their children and make them hate them. This causes great damage to the child's psyche, and as a result, the child may develop "parental alienation syndrome" or mental illness such as "depression".

In Japan, there is a theory that the divorce of parents in such a case itself is child abuse. Aside from domestic violence and other unavoidable divorce cases, Japanese society and the country take it for granted that a third party should intervene to divorce the couple and make the children miserable and unfortunate at current system. This is a definite violation of Article 24, 1 and 4 of UN-CCPR.

Japan's gender equality budget is 9.922 trillion yen annually, of which 1.5 billion yen is for women. It can be fully inferred that the huge budget is used for their political struggle funds at a large rate.

It is very unforgivable that communists and anarchists use Japan's budget and prey on the happiness of women and children while claiming to save women.

Therefore, we request that CCPR issue the following recommendations to the Japanese government

(1) The budget for women's support should be given to public institutions, not to private organizations.

(2) The institutions that receive budgets for women's support should submit regular income and expenditure reports.

(3) Whenever domestic violence (DV) is reported or suspected, the police must intervene and investigate both false DV (child abduction) and genuine DV (child abduction).

(4) Whenever domestic violence (DV) case is reported or suspected, the police should intervene to prevent the abduction of the biological child by separating false DV (abduction of the biological child) from genuine DV (legitimate emergency evacuation).

In order to eliminate false DV and protect real DV victims, the police force should be fully funded, the number of female police officers should be increased, and a special section for DV investigation should be created.
