

XI. Appendix: Photographs of Housing Conditions Among Roma in and from Vsetín, Czech Republic, Persons Collectively Expelled from the Vsetín Municipality in November 2006

Unless otherwise noted, the photographs below were taken by researchers Lucie Fremlová and Jana Kabeláčová during a field mission in May 2007 as part of research by the partners toward the present submission.

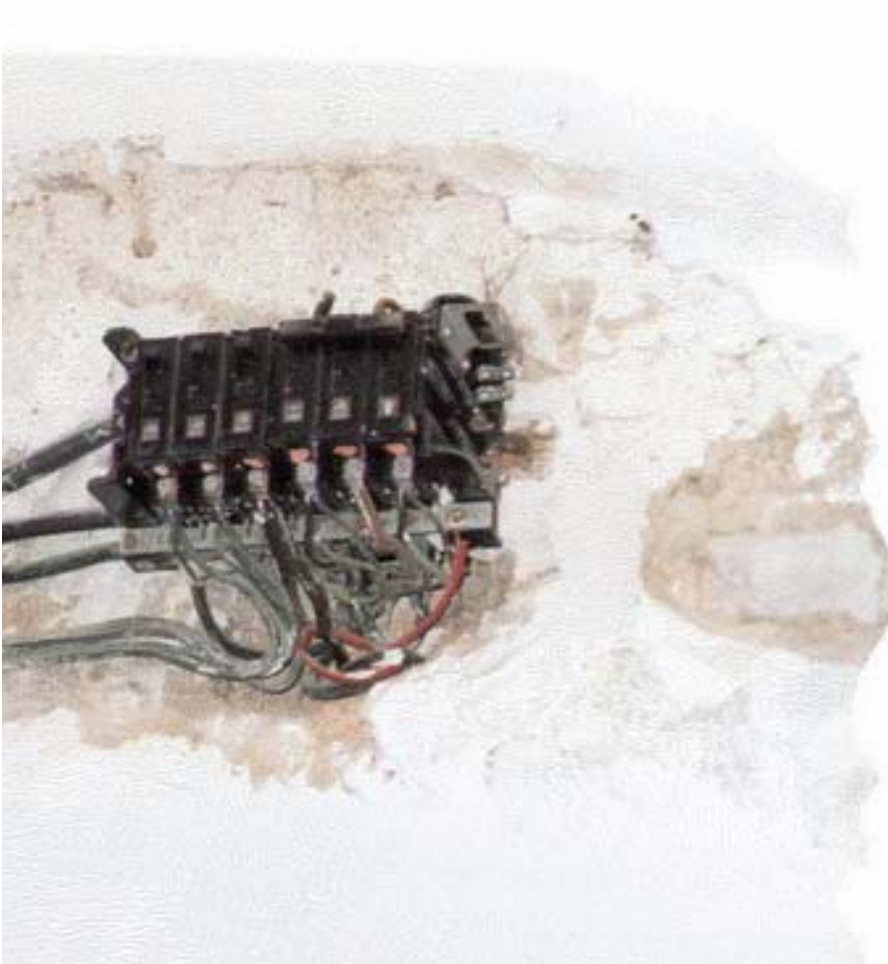

An adjacent barn neighbouring with the house in Stará Červená Voda in the Jeseník district, Czech Republic, 13 May 2007, to which two families were deported by the Vsetín municipality after being expelled from municipal housing without procedure in November 2006. The mass expulsions followed an anti-Romani hate campaign by the municipality.

Bathroom facilities with a boiler in the house in Stará Červená Voda in the Jeseník District, Czech Republic, 13 May 2007, to which two families were deported by the Vsetín municipality after being expelled from municipal housing without procedure in November 2006.

Bathroom facilities in the house in Stará Červená Voda in the Jeseník district, Czech Republic, 13 May 2007, to which two families were deported by the Vsetín municipality after being expelled from municipal housing without procedure in November 2006. Since the deportation, the families have had no potable water at their disposal. They have been forced to buy bottled water as the local water is filled with debris and mud. One of the families has a two-month-old infant.

Electricity in the house in Stará Červená Voda in the Jeseník district, Czech Republic, 13 May 2007, to which two families were deported by the Vsetín municipality after being expelled from municipal housing without procedure in November 2006. The electrical infrastructure and wiring is very unsafe.

A former barn, part of the “housing” provided to the two Romani families forcibly expelled by the Vsetin local authority in November 2006 to Stará Červená Voda in the Jeseník district, Czech Republic, 13 May 2007.

A large hole in the house in Stará Červená Voda where the two Romani families have lived since they were forcibly expelled by the Vsetín municipality. Since the deportation in November, the families have been without potable water.

Living conditions in the town of Vsetin for the Roma and the unsanitary conditions in which they dwelled before the forcible expulsion.

Unnamed mother with child, reprinted from article titled “Resettled Czech Romanies Want Flats from Vsetin”. Photo: ČTK, 18 June 2007.